

ABSTRACT

A routing architecture comprising at least one or more switches for packet switching and a controller for controlling the switches is proposed. A packet is received by the controller through the switch as if the switch is located in the controller.